

NW TRAVELER

THE SEATTLE TIMES AND SEATTLE POST-INTELLIGENCER

seattletimes.com/travel | JUNE 29, 2008 | SUNDAY

Everywhere you look (or go), there's a travel deal

Everybody seems nervous about travel these days. Resort owners, hotel owners, restaurant owners, shopkeepers, the airlines, you name it. Why? Because prices are up for just about everything, and many travelers (that would be you) are rethinking their plans.

Nobody knows what's going to happen, primarily because the huge summer travel season is just beginning.

Which makes this prime time for deals. They're everywhere, and growing.

So today we're taking a look at the deals—tips on how to find them and judge them, a long list (both here and online) of deals offered primarily throughout the Northwest and other stories on who's beginning to suffer from lack of tourists.

We put out the word in the Pacific Northwest and British Columbia, looking for summer travel deals. And we received lots of them—sent to us from hotels, resorts, restaurants, you name it. We even have a few summer deals from farther away.

Our goal is to give you some idea of the savings you might find as you travel in a time of pricey gas, food and airlines.

As always, as you read through these, be skeptical—remember that these are not our deals, but those submitted to us by business owners, public relations offices and readers. So ask questions when you book. Double

The Hotel Lucia in Portland is offering a package with two free TriMet day passes and a map of local attractions. 503- 225-1717 or www.hotel-lucia.com